One day, Molly the milkmaid had filled her pails with milk. Her job was to milk the cows, and then bring the milk to the market to sell. Molly loved to think about what to spend her money on.

As she filled the pails with milk and went to market, she again thought of all the things she wanted to buy. As she walked along the road, she thought of buying a cake and a basket full of fresh strawberries.

A little further down the road, she spotted a chicken. She thought, "With the money I get from today, I'm going to buy a chicken of my own. That chicken will lay eggs, then I will be able to sell milk and eggs and get more money!"

She continued, "With more money, I will be able to buy a fancy dress and make all the other milkmaids jealous." Out of excitement, Molly started skipping, forgetting about the milk in her pails. Soon, the milk started spilling over the edges, covering Molly.

Drenched, Molly said to herself, "Oh no! I will never have enough money to buy a chicken now." She went home with her empty pails.

"Oh, my goodness! What happened to you?" Molly's mother asked.

"I was too busy dreaming about all the things I wanted to buy that I forgot about the pails," she answered.

"Oh, Molly, my dear. How many times do I need to say, 'Don't count your chickens until they hatch?'"

Q - 3 Do the paraphrase of below mentioned paragraphs. [10]

Varanasi is an ancient city on the banks of the River Ganges in Uttar Pradesh, Northern India.

It is one of the most sacred sites in India because it is believed to have been the home of Lord Shiva. Some Hindus believe that the River Ganges pays its respects to Lord Shiva by the direction in which it flows. Usually, the river flows from the north to the south, but at Varanasi it flows from the south to the north.

Millions of pilgrims visit Varanasi in order to purify themselves by bathing in the River Ganges at sunrise.

Some Hindus believe that if they die at Varanasi, they might be able to attain moksha sooner. Because of this, some Hindus go there when they are close to death in order to die there. Others have their ashes scattered there by relatives. A feature of the landscape at Varanasi is the cremation ghats that line the banks of the Ganges.

The processions that take the dead bodies to the ghats may be joyful, even accompanied by singing and dancing, because of the belief in reincarnation and the possibility of moksha of the person who has died.

There are many different funeral rituals, but often the body is dipped into the Ganges and covered with ghee, then wrapped in cotton before being cremated in the open on a funeral pyre. The ashes are then scattered in the River Ganges.

Ethan and his classmates sit next to each other in a seventh-grade English class in Thailand. They are not listening to their teacher or taking notes. Ethan is learning the week's vocabulary by watching a video on his Ipad. Other students are writing answers to a question and answer exercise with digital pens on their own tablets. When they need help, they type a quick message to their teacher, who answers on his own Ipad.

In today's world, tablet computers are changing education. Tablets are more convenient than books. They are more portable, and they have more features. Many teachers believe that in the future, the best jobs will require students to have strong online skills. They also believe that tablets allow students to be more creative. As an example, students in a history class in Singapore are using an app to discover and "rebuild" an ancient city. To start, they take a video tour of the ancient city of Maccu Piccu. With a tablet, they can "take a tour". It is as if they were really there. Next, they use an app to design their own city. Finally, they turn their designs into a presentation and share them instantly on their screens. The students use creativity to solve their own problems. Teachers also find students are more motivated.

Another advantage of tablet education is that it can improve student's test scores. This is because tablets and other online devices allow teachers to help students in real time. Not only that, teachers can quickly look at online data that helps them understand the difficulties and needs of individual students. They can also use AI tools that give them useful feedback about student performances.

Still, no technology is perfect. There are the usual problems of lack of internet access and slow wifi connections. Another disadvantage is that students can get easily distracted. After they complete their assignments, some students end up playing a game or texting a friend. They stop concentrating on the teacher and the classroom. This can be frustrating for teachers. Students often miss important information. They get lazy. They don't do their homework. Too much distraction can also have a negative impact on students' grades. How can these kinds of problems be solved? For one, teachers are going to need more training in using tablets for education. Second, all students need to have reasonable quality devices and good wifi connections. And parents must also learn to adapt to technology they never had in school. But, if students, parents, and teachers can work together, this new type of classroom could become the classroom of the future and prepare children for success in our connected, digital world.
